

Managing change

Rita Sheena, pharmacist, Vancouver

The modern workplace is constantly changing. This is particularly true with health care and social services, where new technologies and changing governments lead to restructuring, cost-cutting, consolidations, mergers and reorganizations.

Workplace change can be stressful, but as a member of HSA, you can count on the union to make sure change is managed in a way to minimize stress, layoffs, and loss of security.

There are currently plans to introduce changes affecting laboratory services in the Interior Health Authority and a number of professions in the Lower Mainland.
